

There are two groups in relation to the way in which the colonization was carried out:

On the one hand we have those areas colonized by the Spaniards and Portuguese's in whom took place a great demographic disaster of the natives, most of them died by the effects of diseases like smallpox, typhus, malaria or many other viral illnesses, because they didn't have any type of immunity against these new diseases. Most of them become infected mainly through contaminated blankets and foods, and in many cases in a deliberate way.
